No Time To Quibble

It is hoped the members listened with understanding to the statement which Prime Minister King made to parliament on his return from the conference at Washington. Mr. King is not an alarmist; and of necessity he had to use measured language in reference to the situation disclosed by President Roosevelt and Mr. Churchill.

The statement issued by the President and Mr. Churchill had to do with the ultimate outcome, not the present situation. When Mr. King said the Allied leaders view the position more gravely than ever before it must be taken that he was telling the simple truth in the general terms which had to be employed in the circumstances. If the details could be made public, it must be supposed they would forbid any feeling of the conference to the near future course of events. This is a very plain implication of the view taken at the conference, that the war may continue for "three or four" more years.

This should have a sobering reaction upon parliament, as it assuredly will upon the public. The grim reality thus dimly but sufficiently outlined, will members continue to waste time repeating the well-known fact that the Government should be denied power to employ the whole of the country's fighting forces wherever fighting must be done if we are to keep the enemy out of our territory?

Nero fiddling while Rome burned is the historic simile of continued obstruction to the repeal of the War Measures Act. The plain path of duty for parliament is to wind up a discussion which has ceased to be anything but a re-breathing of old straw and get ahead with the other important business of the session. Less talk and more action is the only way to get ahead with the men who are charged with the duty of leading the country safely and honorably through the most critical time in its history.

And—if they are concerned about this phase of the matter—that is the way the public will expect the members of act, now that the three-knives-and-fork story has been broken, and we confront the stark fact that only the utmost exertions of all the Allied countries over several more years will save them from ruin and their peoples from slavery.

A Canadian First

Hon. C. G. Power, Minister for Air, raised himself in the estimation of every Canadian who is capable of admiring courage when he said he will vote for the repeal of Section Three tomorrow, and rather expecting—that this will cost him his seat in parliament.

His constituents in Quebec South gave an overwhelming endorsement to the recent plebiscite. Mr. Power made no mention of this verdict was not a clear repudiation of his known views, and refused to compromise the issue. He gave the verdict, "Being a Canadian before I am a Quebecker, I propose to vote for this bill," was his unequivocal declaration that national safety must take precedence over local sentiment so far as he is concerned. "One cannot," he said, "be a Canadian and a Quebecker at the same time."

The people of Quebec South should ponder before they call for their member to resign his seat. One thing can be taken as certain. A recall from Quebec South would not take Mr. Power out of the cabinet nor out of the House—except temporarily. He is altogether too valuable a director of our air branch to be sacrificed at the bidding of any other constituency. And there are a hundred ridings elsewhere in Canada where he could be elected, promoted by acclamation, should he leave the Quebec South seat because of his fidelity to the principle of majority rule.

Should his constituents demand his resignation on that issue, Canada would not lose its capable and courageous air minister, but the province of Quebec would lose another pillar of law. It would lose more than that, for the recall would take the people in that province that Quebec has no contact with the rest of the Dominion but intends to stay out of step.

French-Canadians have shown themselves chivalrous in their treatment of occasions. The voters in Quebec South have an opportunity to add another instance to this honorable record. They can do so by agreeing to discontinue their representative and refusing to demand that he resign the seat because he stands by the opinion which they have known he held.

A Man To Be Watched

M. Laval carefully chose the time at which to openly tell his countrymen that he hopes and prays for a Nazi victory. They have had good reason to suppose this is along, but the British Empire and the threatened fall of Sevastopol provide a background favorable for the announcement. To Frenchmen, permitted to hear and read what the real situation was, it is not surprising that they want them to hear and read, it may seem that the Allied cause is weakening. Laval, on the other hand, took the occasion to make his bid for their active support of the Axis as the power under which they will have to live.

He hid the limits of French prisoners of war, he said, will only be released from German prison camps if and as French workmen go to work in German munitions plants. France had no hope for the future except that the Fuehrer might be gracious to Frenchmen if they grovelled before him.

His hearers were left to infer what would happen to them if the conquering Fuehrer numbered them among the victims of his vengeance. The French officer apparently could detect no lower depths to which he might descend in his zeal for the degradation of his country. Whatever Frenchmen may think of the role M. Laval says Vichy is playing, the obvious point for the Allies is that M. Laval will be a cheerful prospect.

Whatever Frenchmen may think of the role M. Laval says Vichy is playing, the obvious point for the Allies is that M. Laval will be a cheerful prospect. His past will stand some investigating as well. There can be little doubt now that Vichy will be a cheerful prospect. His past will stand some investigating as well. There can be little doubt now that Vichy will be a cheerful prospect.

Free French authorities in London have given out information that—along with uncounted thousands of howling fugitives—1000 children were murdered by Nazi forces on the highways of northern France in June, 1942. The men who ordered that massacre are the men whose hands Laval would place the destiny of France and for whose victory over Russia and Britain the United States he is "praying!"

Up to Tuesday evening Axis submarines had sunk the western Atlantic since the middle of January. This is a terrible record. But there is one redeeming fact. Along the United States Atlantic coast, the U.S. Navy established the convoy system. They occur now mainly in the Caribbean and the Gulf of Mexico. They will grow fewer there also when there enough patrol vessels and planes to convoy ships in those areas.

McDonald had eight strike-outs and gave three walks. Manning Depot had three men on the lineup yesterday. Sammy Supranoff doing the receiving. George Andrews, who collected two hits in three trips and Jack Jones who contributed a great catch in the ninth frame.

The Airmen got their first run in the third inning. Herbie McDonald got a line drive to left field and went to second on a wild pitch. George Andrews brought him in with a double. In the eighth Bill La Roque hit left to left and went to second when McDonald was safe on an error, and to third when Andrews forced McDonald at second. Zoning Board Grants Appeals For Buildings

Action by the Edmonton Zoning Appeal Board has cleared the way for the erection of a $30,000 feed mill by the United Grain Growers Ltd., at its elevator site on 102 street and Saskatchewan Drive.

The Zoning Appeal Board allowed the appeal of the company seeking permission to erect the feed mill despite opposition from district residents. This action was taken at the board's meeting Friday.

It was contended by the residents that the erection of the mill would reduce the value of their property. Also it was contended that dust from the mill, smell of the processing of the feedstuffs to be manufactured, and other nuisances incidental to the mill's operation, would result in great inconvenience to

It was suggested also by the objectors that the fire hazard in the district would be greatly increased.

PREVIOUS ACTION

The objectors referred to city council's action in refusing permission to an oil company to build oil storage tanks at this site, and asked that similar action be taken

J. E. Brownlee, K.C., appearing for the U.G.G. Ltd., submitted there would be no smell from the processing of the feed stuffs, and also said there would be no dust nuisance. He pointed to the fact that one feed and milling company now existed in the area.

He said also that noise from the proposed mill would be negligible, and that the property was on spur trackage, and persons building in the district must have known that commercial and manufacturing buildings would be erected on this trackage.

OVER-RULE INSPECTOR

Over-riding its own regulations, the board allowed the appeal of A. M. Neilson, 10019 106 street, against the decision of the building inspector to alter a two-family dwelling which has been under construction for some time, to a five-suite multiple dwelling. No objection to the change was registered by residents in the district. The board was informed that the usual notice had been sent to burgesses in the district.

The appeal to the board was necessary as the town planning regulations call for a 66 feet frontage for this type of building, while the applicant had only 50 feet.

Last year permission was refused by the board where an applicant on 107 street did not have the required frontage for such a dwelling.

"WORLD WE DESERVE"
"We will get the kind of world we deserve," after victory has been won, Rev. Tremblay declared.

Before the war, he ministered said, people in the democratic nations were allowing their beliefs in fundamental things to "foster." He said we are in desperate need of a belief in a higher power at the centre of the universe.

He said we must as a nation demonstrate that we believe in the liberty and freedom we are fighting for by solving such problems as unemployment and poverty, and simply shrug our shoulders and say: "It's too bad but nothing can be done."

And not only must we see that our own people obtain liberty and freedom, we must also see that it is available to all mankind, Rev. Tremblay said.

SPRITUAL BACKGROUND

"Unless there is a spiritual background to Army Week it will turn out to be just another parade," the speaker declared. He urged his listeners to think prayerfully of the 18,000 Canadian soldiers who have been on guard in Britain and the other thousands fighting on their own shores during the week.

He observed that the Canadian soldier in Britain, a role of frustration for a long period now. Such a role is much more difficult than one of hard battle, he said.

Civilians were urged to invite soldiers to their homes during Army Week and to make sure they give to our fighting men the little comforts that mean so much.

Singing along untriedly past the reviewing stand the various units in the parade received round after round of applause from the spectators.

Heading the entire parade was the band of the 2nd Bn. Edmonton Regiment, under the direction of Bandmaster Sgt. Gordon Tapp. The band was followed by a section of the Canadian Women's Army Corps, C.A. (A). This group was loudly cheered for its particularly smart appearance.

CHAPTER IV

THE car brushed the sage bush behind which Judith hid, and slipped a few feet before the car came to a stop. Three men got out and ran to the plane. She crept close to the car and peered in cautiously. It was empty. Without a second's hesitation, she opened the door and got in. She slipped a few feet before the car came to a stop. Three men got out and ran to the plane. She crept close to the car and peered in cautiously. It was empty.

She hadn't known an automobile could gather so much speed in second gear. She followed the tracks across the desert. For July 200 yards the trail ran perfectly straight. She shut off the lights as a car cracked behind her. Dirt and gravel flew up and sprayed the car with excitement. She followed the track with excitement. She followed the track with excitement. She followed the track with excitement.

A faint light, barred in the distance and she slowed the car. As she draw nearer, a snarl took shape from the window came the light she had seen. She stopped the car some yards from the house and got out. The small gun gripped tightly in her right hand. Trembling a little, she moved slowly forward to look in at the window. She felt sure she would find Tom Burke held a captive inside.

By standing on her toes and craning her neck, Judith could see in the window, hoping Tom would see her. He did. But only a slight flicker of his dark eyes gave hint to her presence. He turned his head and spoke to the man and she knew it was to keep the man's attention so he would not discover her.

She crept to the door, the gun ready for action, her heart hammering against her ribs. On the threshold, she poised for action.

"Put up your hands!" she told a pig grimly. There was not a tremor in her voice though her knees shook violently and threatened to give way.

The man whirled, reaching upward with his arms as he did so. Judith did not once underestimate him as she reached for the knife. She knew if the man made a move her finger would express the truth.

She worked hard at the ropes with the knife in her left hand and as the last thread was cut from around Tom's wrists, her eyes flickered from the man across the room. There was a quick movement and Burke made a dive for the knife, his feet still tied together.

The two went down together. "Beat it," yelled Tom between his teeth, as he rolled over and over on the floor with his adversary. "Get away from here!"

But Judith hesitated, waiting for a chance to use her gun. Tom spoke once more. "Get in Sin Diego," he ordered hoarsely. "Go on, Judy!"

She let her gun quickly to the car. She did not look back but drove furiously down the road, hoping it would lead her toward her destination. She would not let herself think of Tom fighting back there in the cabin with that man. If the plans had not been in her possession, she would have stayed. But she not only had a duty to her company, she now had one to her government.

Before long, she struck a highway, and brained a little easier. Speed was the thing she needed and the car seemed to have plenty of it. "I wonder how much gas this car has in it?" she asked herself and switched on the dash light. A feeling of horror enveloped her—the tank was nearly empty. But as if in answer to her thought, the dash lights picked up an small station by the side of the road. It was closed, but she refused to be dismayed.

She pulled the big car into the drive and honked. She kept honking until she woke the man who was sleeping in the rear of his station. He came out, rubbing his eyes and grumbling loudly.

"I'm sorry to disturb you but I have to have gas for my car," Judith told him earnestly and his eyes widened at the sight of a pretty young woman. "You will just have to open up and sell me some."

"Why sure," he agreed, his mood changing instantly. "Always glad to oblige a lady. How many?" he asked as he unlocked the pump.

"Fill it up," she instructed, and he hurriedly turned the pump handle. As she sat there, two cars whizzed by and each time her heart came racing for fear they might miss her pursuers. The man put the car on the pump and she saw a ten-dollar bill. He went into the charge and while he was gone she slipped out of the car and stopped.

"Why sure," he agreed, his mood changing instantly. "Always glad to oblige a lady. How many?" he asked as he unlocked the pump.

That was all Judith needed to hear to make her exit into gear and drive off without her change. Driving a stolen car was bad enough, but when some one recognized it and were probably a part of the spy ring she was running from, it was high time to move on, and fast!

At a moment she saw the headlights of the other car, saw only the rear of it. But she never looked up from the road in front of her as the speedometer hovered over and above the 90 mark. She quickly pressed the two cars in front of her.

The eastern sky turned pink as daybreak neared and Judith drove on. The car she drove loved enough to lift her eyes to the rear view mirror. Nothing was behind her. She was alone. She let out a long, weary sigh and relaxed her aching back against the seat cushion. She was exhausted. Her eyes burned from the strain of the night's wild drive. She was thankful for the light of day.

"I've got to get rid of this car," she thought. "Maybe I could hitchhike the rest of the way." She approached the outer edge of a small town where everything seemed to be asleep. She turned down a deserted street and parked the car. Crawling out stiffly, she did a few stretching exercises and was soon limber enough to walk back to the highway. She walked through town to the opposite side and set down in a projected spot to rest.

She waited for a ride, waiting several years go by unnoted. Finally she spotted a big truck coming down the road. She stood up and moved to the side of the pavement, lifting her thumb as she had seen hitchhikers do. She could not keep the amused little grin from her face. The truck slowed, stopped. A burly fellow leaned over and opened the cap door.

"Hop in, auster," he invited, grinning.

Today's hand was No. 3 of the series played in the recent inter-collegiate championships. East and West were par by default, three to trump. West opens the four of spades. The declarer has to develop the club to win enough tricks. East gets in twice and can stop game by continuing spades. The whole point is that West must not play his ace of spades before the third round, as of spades is no side entry.

More pairs were earned on this hand than on any other of the 18. The women played did especially well on it. Among those who defended perfectly were Marjorie Bender and Patricia Langwell of Burnard. Mary McManus and Frances Leinen of New Rochelle College.

Other women's colleges that participated in the contest were Agnes Scott, Elmira, Florida State, Pennsylvania, Radcliffe, Rochester, Sarah Lawrence, Welles and Wilson.
